

Abstract of the Disclosure

A method and apparatus for high-speed serial data recovery. The apparatus comprises providing a storage device to store data and a block to adjust the position of the data in the storage device to account for at least one sampling error. The method comprises storing data into a storage device and adjusting the location of the data in the storage device to account for synchronization errors.

10